Report description:

The slow recovery of long-haul visitors to Hong Kong has been a significant hurdle for upscale and luxury hotels that traditionally cater for this segment. These visitors, known for longer stays and higher spending, have been notably absent, impacting the revenue streams of upscale establishments that rely on their patronage. Meanwhile, Chinese tourists, a vital source market for Hong Kong, have altered their travel behaviours, opting for value-for-money same-day visits over traditional overnight...
