Report description:

Analgesics in the US is expected to see a slight decline in retail current value terms in 2024. This performance is largely being led by mid-single digit slowdowns for systemic paediatric analgesics, sales of which are still rebounding from the high growth established during 2022's "triple-demic", which led sales of paediatric analgesics to skyrocket. In systemic adult analgesics, aspirin and naproxen are expected to continue to witness steadily diminishing value sales, as more consumers are made...
