Report description:

In 2024, some of the leading producers of edible oils have been lowering product prices since the beginning of the year, in response to the falling international prices of major oils, and government requests for price stabilisation. Raw palm oil prices have been consistently declining in this year. Other major oils, such as sunflower, soybean, and canola oil, have also seen improved supply-demand conditions, resulting in lower raw prices compared with 2023 and the historical average. As a result...
