Report description:

The retail volume decline recorded in recent years by sauces, dips and condiments in the UK is noticeably slowing. The strength of at-home dining, largely influenced by economic factors such as inflation and the cost-of-living crisis, is shaping a growing trend towards the premiumisation of home-cooked meals. Local consumers, in a bid to save money by dining in rather than going to restaurants, are willing to spend more on high-quality cooking sauces and condiments that replicate restaurant expe...
