Report description:

The global orange industry faced multiple challenges in 2024, especially in Brazil, which supplies 70% of the world's orange juice. Key growing regions in Brazil have experienced extreme drought and increasing cases of citrus greening disease, a bacterial infection with no cure, leading to a forecasted output drop to levels unseen since the 1980s. Although New Zealand's citrus production accounts for less than 0.05% of the global total, strong local demand for juice has made the country heavily...
