Report description:

One of the most prominent features of Japan's demographics is the simultaneous occurrence of an ageing population and a declining birth rate. According to Euromonitor's Consumers data, Japan's total population peaked at 128 million in 2008, but the number of live births fell below one million in 2016. This decline accelerated in recent years, exacerbated by the COVID-19 pandemic, with live births dropping to around 730,000 in 2023 - less than half the number recorded 40 years earlier, in 1984.
