Report description:

Retail volume sales of fruits in Australia have been declining since 2021-2022, coinciding with high rates of inflation for the category due to supply issues and the climate impacting overall supply. Local consumers have been forced to budget more carefully to manage their expenses due to the rising cost of living, resulting in some reducing their purchase frequency of fresh fruits. While inflation has started to ease, the average unit price of fruits is still high enough to disincentivise consu...
