Report description:

Demand for systemic analgesics continued to normalise in Singapore in 2024 following the surge in purchases seen in 2022. During the peak of the COVID-19 pandemic and its aftermath, consumers stockpiled these products to self-medicate for post-vaccination symptoms and common cold symptoms caused by later variants of the virus. With the threat of COVID-19 having largely been mitigated, the urgency to purchase systemic analgesics has decreased, leading to a stabilisation in the growth rate.
