Report description:

Israel's consumer credit market saw rising demand for home lending in 2024. Loans secured with a lien on a savings account are typically more attractive to consumers due to their lower interest rates compared to other types of loans. However, the segment saw a decline mid-review period, largely driven by shifting market conditions. These loans are often used to fund down payments on houses, but with the housing market cooling significantly, demand for such loans decreased. Rising living costs ha...
