Description

Report Scope

This report analyzes trends in the global satellite internet market. Using 2023 as the base year, the report provides estimates of market value data for the forecast period from 2024 through 2029. Revenue forecasts for this period are segmented by orbit and end-user. The study also covers an in-depth regional analysis of the Americas, Europe, Asia-Pacific (APAC), and the Middle East and Africa (MEA). The report covers the emerging technologies that are expected to shape the satellite internet market in the forecast period. Additionally, the leading companies in this market are analyzed, including their market share and relevant key developments in the global market. The leading companies in the market are also profiled.

Report Includes

- An overview of the global market for satellite internet
- Analyses of the global market trends, with sales data for 2023, estimates for 2024, forecasts for 2025, 2028, and projections of compound annual growth rates (CAGRs) through 2029
- Evaluation and forecast the market size for satellite internet market based on orbit, end user, and geographical region
- Discussion of emerging technologies and developments and various macroeconomic factors affecting the satellite internet market
- Review of patent data and new developments regarding various categories and sub-categories of satellite internet
- Assessment of the vendor landscape, including the market shares of leading companies, their product portfolios and financial overviews
- Information on recent mergers, acquisitions, expansions, collaborations, investments, divestments, product launches, and other strategic developments
- Profiles of the leading market vendors

Summary:

Satellite internet technology has advanced significantly in recent years, competing with more established land-based internet providers like fiber and cable. These developments have increased satellite internet speed, lowered latency, and reached new regions. The creation of LEO satellite constellations is a noteworthy technological advance in satellite internet. Another significant development is the adoption of HTS, which considerably expands the volume of data that can be sent between satellites and users.
