Report description:

In 2024, Japan continued to witness increases in unit prices, which drove retail current value growth in home care, despite a continued slight decline in retail volumes. The volume decline was influenced by several factors, including the falling population, the growing amount of time spent outside the home, and the overall rises in the prices of consumer goods. According to Euromonitor's Economies data, Japan's annual inflation rate had remained relatively stable over the past three decades, wit...
