Key Highlights

Norinchukin Bank, also known as Nochu Bank, is a Japanese cooperative financial institution that was established on December 20, 1923. Headquartered in Tokyo, Japan, the bank primarily serves over 5,600 agricultural, forestry, and fishery cooperatives across the country. It plays a significant role in supporting the agricultural industry by providing financial services tailored to the unique needs of these cooperatives. Norinchukin Bank has grown to become one of the largest financial institutions in Japan, with total assets exceeding ¥106 trillion, reflecting its substantial impact on both the national and international financial markets.

The bank operates through several key business segments. It provides a range of financial services, including loans for agriculture modernization, corporate finance for cooperatives, and specialized funding. Norinchukin also offers services in structured finance, euro funding, and asset management. In addition to its domestic operations, the bank has a strong international presence with branches in major global financial hubs such as New York, London, and Singapore. The bank also operates representative offices in Hong Kong and Beijing, further enhancing its global reach. This extensive network allows Norinchukin Bank to engage in various investment activities, including bonds, private equity, and real estate, reinforcing its role as a major player in the global financial landscape.
