Report description:

The North America reactive adhesives market size was valued at USD 1.63 Billion in 2024. The market is further projected to grow at a CAGR of 1.90% between 2025 and 2034, reaching a value of USD 1.97 Billion by 2034.

Canada is home to a large number of global vehicle manufacturers with their local assembly lines. These include Ford, General Motors, Stellantis, Toyota, and Honda. According to the North America reactive adhesives market analysis, moisture-reactive PUR hot melt adhesives are deployed in car bodies and vehicle applications due to their high strength, weather resistance, flexibility, and irreversible properties. These are used to glue lamps, electronic equipment, automotive filtration, automotive carpets, seating, and interiors.

The expansion of the retail sector aids the demand for modified acrylic reactive adhesives for use in digital signage. Prominent supermarkets using digital signage include Walmart, inc., Kroger Co., and Costco Wholesale Corporation among others.

Epoxy adhesives comprise a resin and a hardener. As these two components are mixed, it results in a chemical reaction forming a strong, durable bond. These active adhesives are widely deployed in the construction, automotive, electronics, and aerospace sectors for bonding structural components and assembling parts. Prominent aerospace and defence companies in the United States of America, including Lockheed Martin Corp, The Boeing Co, General Dynamics Corp, Raytheon Technologies Corp, and Northrop Grumman Corp. According to the reactive adhesives market in North America, these companies are crucial contributors to the demand for epoxy reactive adhesives for aerospace manufacturing.

Market Segmentation
