Key Highlights

Banque de France is the central bank of France, established in 1800 by Napoleon Bonaparte to stabilize the post-revolutionary economy. Incorporated as a public institution, it plays a fundamental role in the French and European financial systems. Headquartered in Paris, France. The bank maintains an extensive network of regional branches across metropolitan France and its overseas territories, ensuring broad geographic coverage. As a member of the Eurosystem alongside the European Central Bank (ECB), Banque de France is responsible for implementing monetary policy, safeguarding financial stability, and supervising banks and insurance companies. Its key business segments also include currency issuance and circulation, economic analysis, and the provision of financial services to the state, including treasury operations and the production of secure documents. Through these functions, the bank contributes to maintaining price stability and financial confidence in France and across the Eurozone, reinforcing its critical position within the European economic and monetary landscape.
