Headquartered in Charlotte, North Carolina, the division plays a central role in the bank's Global Wealth and Investment Management (GWIM) business, which manages over $4.3 trillion in client assets. The company serves a broad spectrum of clients, ranging from mass-affluent individuals to ultra-high-net-worth families, through a multi-tiered structure consisting of Merrill Wealth Management, Merrill Edge, and Bank of America Private Bank. Founded as part of Bank of America's evolution into a full-service financial powerhouse, Bank of America Wealth Management traces its roots to legacy firms like Merrill Lynch (founded in 1914) and U.S. Trust (founded in 1853), both of which were acquired and integrated into Bank of America in the 2000. These acquisitions have enabled the wealth management division to combine personalized, high-touch financial advice with advanced digital capabilities and institutional-grade investment access. The division's offerings are categorized into three main channels. Merrill Wealth Management delivers advisor-led investment strategies for affluent clients, offering tailored solutions in retirement, education, and portfolio management. Merrill Edge caters to self-directed and guided investors with low-cost trading, robo-advisory tools, and digital planning features. Meanwhile, the Bank of America Private Bank serves the high-net-worth segment with specialized services in estate planning, trust management, philanthropy, custom lending, and family office support. Bank of America Wealth Management is widely recognized for its seamless integration of technology and human expertise. Clients benefit from a unified platform that blends banking, investing, and lending services under one digital and advisory framework.
