Key Highlights

Royal London, founded in 1861, began as The Royal London Friendly Society in a London coffee shop when Joseph Degge and Henry Ridge set out to offer dignified burial options to the poor. Over time, it evolved from a burial club into a major financial institution, becoming a mutual in 1908. Today, it is the UK's largest mutual life, pensions, and investment company, and ranks among the top 30 mutuals globally. Headquartered at London, Royal London manages 173 billion in assets and services 8.7 million policies with the support of over 4,500 employees. Its core business segments include life insurance, pensions, retirement planning, and investment management. As a mutual, Royal London is owned by its members, not shareholders, which means decisions are made with customers' interests at heart. Its presence is primarily in the UK, where it continues to uphold its founding values of protection and community responsibility.
